SOCIETY WEARS TATTOO OF THE KAISER

BERLIN, June 17.—Worn out by the strain of the festivities attending the marriage of her daughter, Princess Victoria Louise, and the fact that the quarter centennial jubilee in commemoration of Kaiser Wilhelm's accession to the throne, the Empress was indisposed today and was unable to take part in the ceremony.

There was a big parade of workmen through the streets between hours of merriment. Thousands of German and foreign soldiers marched in the parade, and the Kaiser's army band played the "March to the Beer Garden."

The weather was magnificent, typical "Hohenzollern" weather, in the language of the Kaiser's first wife, the Empress. In the German's most interesting manner, he was today, as in the past, the center of the world's attention. He is estimated that the requests for autographs of the Kaiser's portrait today were valued at $5,000,000. Ambassador Lehmann called upon Mr. Carnegie.

Easy to Have Pretty Hands and Arms

"Don't use creams or lotions on the hands and arms," cautions a well-known beauty specialist. "Instead, employ the skin-bath, but first cleanse and dry the hands and arms. To prepare the bath, put a pint of water in a quart of water, then add a few drops of lemon juice. (A few minutes, allowing it to dry on the skin slowly.) Then, if you wish, use this beauty-bath in light and morning."

This beauty-bath will overcome the red, rough, unsmooth condition of the skin and give it a charming softness and velvety texture. Liver spots, tan, freckles and other blemishes quickly vanish and leave the skin with a delicate pink glow. Nearly any druggist can supply pulverized skin in original $1.00 bottle.

RED SHIRTS IN BIG PARADE IN CHARLESTON

Charleston was crowded today with thousands of men, women and children who pointed to the red shirts of the veterans as they took part in the celebration commemorating the 15th anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg.

The program for the day included the veteran's parade in the morning, the military, naval and air parade in the afternoon and the fireworks at the Fort Mifflin grounds in the evening.

The funeral incident of the morning was the most important. It was the funeral of the late William H. Sullivan, a prominent citizen of Charleston, who died last week.

GARFIELD'S GRADUATES AT HARVARD STADIUM

The greatest day in a Harvard man's college life is Class Day—greater than the day to make the Phi Beta Kappa or the day to make the Phi Beta Kappa or the day to make the Phi Beta Kappa.

The Class of 1913 was graduated today at Harvard Stadium. The ceremony was held at 10:30 A. M. and was attended by a large number of guests.

William Rogers, Secretary of the Harvard Alumni Association, presided over the exercises. He made a few remarks and then introduced the speaker, Mr. Rogers.

DAVID R. WILLIAMS, who caused surprise at Andover Theological graduation by making a speech on Socialism not down on the program.

David R. Williams, who created a sensation at the Andover Theological Seminary Commencement exercises by delivering the light to deliver the program, today declared he was forced to do so by "poorly chosen words, myself when I heard the others babbling of heaven and hell."

Williams is twenty-three and a socialist. He graduated with honors from Marietta College, Ohio, in 1910, and is a Phi Beta Kappa man. The faculty of the Andover School refused to permit young Williams to have a part on the program. There were only four days in the class. After his three classmates had delivered their orations, Williams arose unannounced, and taking possession of the rostrum, began an address of a socialistic nature.

Today, at the home of his father, the Rev. Dr. R. Williams, Williams said he was not a socialist, but a Christian. He said he was not a socialist, but a Christian. He said he was not a socialist, but a Christian.

COURT TIMES TARIFF VISITOR FROM BOSTON

WASHINGTON, June 17.—Senator La Follette, of Rhode Island, was examined by the Overseas lobby inquiry committee today, but was unable to give the investigators any information about a lobby in Washington.

Senator La Follette gave the committee a short list of persons who had called upon him to talk tariff. One of these was Charles P. Smith of Boston, one of the prominent customs lawyers of the country. Representatives of the House Market Club have called on him and several other New England people whom he mentioned.

The annexation of Cuba by the United States and the admission of sugar and other products free of duty to this country are advocated by Senator William Allen Smith of Michigan. He said he had always been opposed to Cuban reciprocity, but after studying the matter, he would favor the admission of her products.

"There always has been a lobby in Washington and always will be, and I think there ought to be," said Senator Smith.

OUR VETERAN TRAITORS OUT, GRIES WALSH ON CLASS DAY

Lieutenant-Governor David I. Walsh, standing at the guest table at the annual banquet of the Veterans Literary Association, in the drill hall of the Charlestown Arsenal, was warmly applauded by the veterans of the Civil War, who were the guests of the party. He said in part:

"There is a thought I want to leave with you tonight, and that is in connection with those men in public life who betray their pledges to the people. Such men ought to be driven from public life. This government of ours is a government of the people. The people are not to be deceived. The people are not to be deceived. The people are not to be deceived."

BOSTON LOSES FIGHT FOR LOW FREIGHT RATE

Boston shippers today lost their fight for a lower freight rate between Boston and the West. The Interstate Commerce Commission refused to modify its previous decision fixing a differential here which gives an advantage to Baltimore and Philadelphia.

The Boston and New York shippers had asked for a lower rate. The rate for through freight, booked to Europe, is the same through Boston as through New York. The rate for freight assigned to Boston or New York, however, is lower for New York, and Baltimore and Philadelphia have a still greater advantage, winning a trade advantage over Boston.

The Interstate Commission's decision was announced in Washington and reported in dispatches here.

BATTING ORDER TODAY.
PILGRIMS. PITTSBURGH.
Maranville, a.s. Byrne, 35.

PITTSBURGH, June 17.—The Boston Pilgrims are confident of getting the majority of the present series from the Pirates, who just now appear to be entirely disorganized. When the United States is accepted here at the inauguration of the-western Jews, they dropped two pavers on his head, and then, after recovering their last stride. Since the Pilgrims have been going well and the Pirates have been going back, the village crew arrived last yesterday for the first time since Clarke's cripples, they were only a gain and a half below the Pirates, and the village's material decreased to the same landmarks. They walked the beach they inhabited and watched the hauls.

Slut Kuchlop continued his work on the deck yesterday. It was a hot water once or twice, but that fact didn't worry him in the least. He stuck to his knitting and moved down the Pirates' ladder to the bottom of the ship on the eighth lining. Vox wanted for a starter and then Wagner started to con-

For a purely sporting angle the Derby is the premier classic of the turf from the standpoint of a society function. The Associated Press compares favorably with the Autliff and Chantilly meetings in France.

Not alone was the course thoroughly policed, but detectives roved among the crowds in the hope of catching gamblers. The two stakes of $10,000 each were won by Lord Carnarvon's Rivolt, with Carnarvint second and Junior third.

SIDELIGHTS ON SPORTS

By A. H. C. MITCHELL

IT is getting quite the fashion for the Red Sox to play extra innings contests. Not satisfied with that, 15-losing set to with Cleveland last week, our boys insisted on repeating their win on St. Louis. They picked out the hottest day of the year for the 12-inning game at Fenway Park yesterday. Perhaps they wanted to see Joe Wood jump himself. Joe had to do it, too, for Leverage, the left-hander who pitched with St. Louis was right there with the goods all the time.

THE St. Louis man used a puzzling change of pace and a very effective slow ball that fooled the Red Sox completely, time and again. Wood, as usual, relied on his speed and as usual held the Browns down to a few hits. He retired the side on strikes in the fourth. In the middle of the game five of the Browns hit grounders to him in succession and Joe threw them all out at first.

STEVIE WINKER is the boy who is delivering the stuff these days. Two of the plays he made against the Browns in that last game were diamonds of the first water. Undoubtedly they saved Wood's bacon. He hit the ball hard every time up, two of his attempts going to the left field back where Johnston gathered them in.

IT was four straight defeats for the Browns, but except on Saturday, when the Red Sox got away to a big lead, they made the home extended irrelevant to take first money. At that the team doesn't look at all strong. They showed some good pitchers, however, in Leverage, Larver and Baumgardner.

THE score board at Fenway Park showed the humbug of the Cleveland-Athletic battle. It was a good thing for the Red Sox, who were over a victory, but the Athletics got there as usual. There is a growing feeling that Connie Mack's crowd are ticked for the pennant. Of late, however, they have been hitting poorly and will have to do better if they expect to keep on winning.

TODAY we have with us our old friend Hubby Jennings and his hand of barometers from Detroit. The Tigers are no longer the great team they were three or four years ago. Jennings is not quoted in the newspapers as often as he used to be quoted. But he is a good one, and it is said he commences as good as ever, and that his voice keeps up his merry coaching. With Jennings is the great Ty Cobb, who is always worth the price of admission. Time was when the Tigers would run the Boston grounds, but it is doubtful if they will this year unless it is this afternoon.

YOUNG MOSLEY, the recruit taken to Hot Springs with the Red Sox and farmed out early in the season, has been recalled by the Red Sox management on account of his good work in Youngstown, and he will pitch against the Tigers in the morning game today.

McKENNIE, who was a member of the Boston Nationals early this year, and who made the Southern Trip with them, played a game against Mosley last Fall after the close of the regular season. The writer that in that game Mosley had more "stuff" than he had ever seen in a pitcher. This is quite a compliment. If Mosley goes well here, he will be a valuable addition to the Red Sox pitching staff.

PRESIDENT MAIERER is back from his Maine fishing trip. He is caught up there, according to his friends, was a real cut of numbers, but that's not the way to win.

VICE-PRESIDENT JOHN I. TAYLOR, who has been ill of late, is back again on his job of rooting hard for the Red Sox.

WILSON Talks Baseball. President Wilson yesterday told Jimmy (tailor) manager of the White Sox, who Jimmy dropped in to shake hands with the chief executive, that he favored a big international baseball league that would bring about meetings of the champion ball teams of all nations.

Dorchester High was out to even up its teaming defeat at the hands of English High on April 19, when it met the Blue and White for the second time this season at Dunbar across this morning.

The first game was a hard one to lose and Tom Fitzgerald was out for revenge and at the same time he intended to show Freddy Brennan a thing or two.

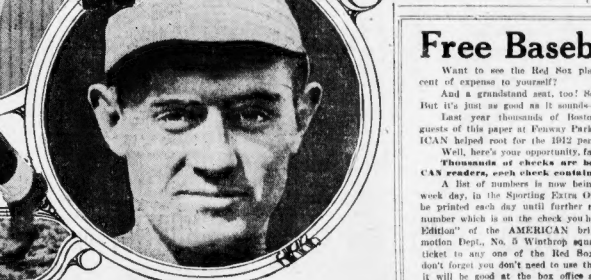

Catch O'Brien's hope started as the favorite because of the fine hand of ball they have been playing to late, as was shown by their 3-0 defeat of Merrick Ave last week.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., June 17.—Harvard Yale will battle in the first game of a series for baseball supremacy on the Yale field at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Because of the better showing this season, Old Eli is made the favorite, but here is little telling what the outcome will be. Yale has won twenty-six games, but four and tied one this season, and still the Crimson team cannot boast of such a record, taking all in all, its showing has been very creditable.

Supporters of the two ancient rivals are looking forward to a pitcher's battle between Sam Felton for Harvard and

Denning to Enter Princeton in Fall

Harry Denning, the former crack pitcher of the Brooklyn City School who has been attending Irving School in the Hudson in New York, has returned to his home for the summer after a most successful season. The young giant was one of the two stars for his school this spring. His own statistics are as follows: 10 wins and 4 losses, 100 strikeouts and 100 hits.

Denning, who also is a star football player, has taken the college course for Princeton, and should prove a valuable man for the New Jersey school. He has a great "right" arm, with an abundance of speed, and with the kind of solid ball, he will be able to stand the wear and tear of a strenuous season.

HOT LINERS

The Naps are growing for the present who whopped in their last game last week ago that Bender and Plank, the pitching mainstay of the team, were about to "crack" over the top. They were against the Naps (who had won) and Bender crushed them in battle and lifted the Naps' ship.

Russell, the new pitcher of the White Sox, looks like one of the best finds of the season. He pitched his team to an other victory yesterday, a 4-0 win over the Senators.

Falkenberg, the changed Nap Teller, who has a string of ten straight victories, has been able to win a series of straight defeats, the worst against the Athletics yesterday, and dropped the third straight.

The Dodgers seem to have established a season's record for cheering yesterday when they pounded out a 10-0 victory. The Giants had a rather easy time defeating the Reds yesterday.

The Cubs looked upon the league as the "hot" team yesterday.

Joe Judge's team failed to make a half dozen home runs each day while playing in New York and because he is having about 400, some of the Boston sport writers are putting the Red Sox down in the "going back" column.

The Cardinals played a 6-0 run over the Dodgers in the fourth inning and then the Brooklyn outfit got the better of the result that it looked like runs in five innings and won a 10-0 game.

The Tigers won their game from the Yankees in the ninth inning yesterday, going to bat with the score 3-2 against them, and clinching out three runs.

The police invited White Sox spectators to the charge of gambling.

Free Baseball Tickets

Want to see the Red Sox play on the home grounds, without a cent of expense to yourself?

And a grandstand seat, too? Sounds great, doesn't it, Mr. Fan? But it's just as good as it sounds—that's the best part of it.

Last year thousands of Boston AMERICAN readers were the guests of this paper at Fenway Park, and at the expense of the AMERICAN helped out for the 1922 season.

Well, here's your opportunity, fans, to do the same thing this year. Thousands of checks are being distributed among AMERICAN readers, each check containing a number.

A list of numbers is now being printed in the AMERICAN each day, in the Sporting Extra ONLY. One hundred numbers will be printed each day until further notice. When a duplicate of the number which is on the check you hold appears in the "Sporting Extra Edition" of the AMERICAN bring or send same to the Promotion Dept., No. 5 Washington square, and you will receive a free ticket to any one of the Red Sox games on the home grounds, and don't forget you don't need to use the ticket until you feel like it, as it will be good at the box office at Fenway Park any time that you present it.

If you haven't yet obtained a check ask your newsdealer or news boy for some.

Watch your numbers carefully. If your number does not appear today, it may tomorrow. But when it does it means a free Red Sox ticket for you.

Watch for today's list of numbers in the "Sporting Extra Edition" of the AMERICAN out today at 6:30 p. m.

HARVARD AND YALE NINES CLASH IN OPENING BATTLE

JIMMY GARDNER MEETS KENNEDY AT MANCHESTER

By JACK CONWAY

Jimmy Gardner, the pride of Lowell and one of the most brilliant hitters that ever lived on a baseball game, will meet the big slugger of New York, N. B., this evening. Gardner will clash with Kennedy at Manchester, N. B., in a two-round contest at Textile Park and the boxing is sure to be fast from start to finish.

Gardner has not boxed for over a year, but believes that he is capable of making his former lefty position among the top stars. When Jimmy was in his prime a few years ago, he was without a peer in the heavyweight division.

Kennedy is Star Performer. The boxing middleweights in the country also had great regard for the fighting ability of the Lowell man and there were few 125-pounders who were able to defeat him. Even the slinky Frank Knox was forced to lose to Gardner.

In Kennedy, Jimmy will meet a worthy opponent who is certain to give him a rugged battle. Gardner will have to do his best if he is to win.

New York has been bringing a great prize lately and has been winning six of seven fights, including a win over the champion of the world, Max Baer.

While the past few days in his hotel sick with pneumonia at St. Albans, La., Kennedy is now feeling better.

Kennedy is not as eager a boxer as Gardner, but it is a sweet puncher and delicate in making things with an opponent at close quarters.

Fallen to Meet Morgan. The second round of eight rounds between Jimmy Fallon at Rochester, the former 160-pound national amateur champion, and Young Morgan of Manchester, N. H., has aroused considerable interest.

Morgan is a big favorite with the fight fans of the Granite State, and he will have to be at the top of his game to win from Fallon, who has been one of the best of the line of the boxing game while sparring with Jimmy Walsh.

What Has Gone Before

GORDON KELLY, a young man from the mountains, who says that he has never played on any ball field and that he has never even seen a ball game in his life, joins the Atlanta club and by his phenomenal playing becomes the sensation of the baseball world and the Boston Red Sox buy his release for $250,000. In the meantime, he meets and falls in love with Mildred Derry, daughter of Gabe Derry, a rich timber speculator. In his first game in Atlanta Gordon hits a terrific smash. He ends in three runs, but in sliding for home he cracks into the catcher, is knocked unconscious and his leg is broken. Mildred Derry runs on the field and takes his head in her lap. The night after Gordon Kelly leaves the hospital he disappears as if from the face of the earth.

When Gabe Derry reads in the papers of how his daughter scored on the ball field, he is thunderstruck and struggles to take her up to his bungalow in the mountains. Forrest Cain, a rich young man, who has become Gordon's enemy, also loves Mildred. He follows her and calls on her every day, until he is called back to Atlanta by his sister's illness. One day Mildred goes on a fishing trip with Elmer Shepherd, a boy, and is surprised by the sudden appearance of Gordon Kelly. For a moment he holds her in his arms, and then they are interrupted by Elmer. Gordon says he lives there.

Forrest Cain returns to the mountains and takes Mildred to ride. He asks her to be his wife and when she refuses he becomes ugly. Gordon and Elmer come upon them and Cain tries to shoot Gordon, but a stone thrown by the boy knocks the pistol from his hand. Cain, while enraged against Gordon, meets a mountaineer and takes him a proposition, one of which he takes up into the mountains and meets four rough-looking men and gives them money.

Mildred and Gordon become engaged. He takes her to see his home, which proves to be a splendid property on which his father spent over two millions, and tells her how he has always lived there.

HOW THIS WOMAN FOUND HEALTH

Would Not Give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for All Rest of Medicine in the World.

Utica, Ohio. "I suffered everything from a female weakness after my baby came. I had numb spells and was dizzy. I had black spots before my eyes, my back ached and I was so weak I could hardly stand up. My face was yellow, even my fingernails were colorless and I had discharges."

I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now I am stout, well and healthy. I can do all my own work and can walk to town and back and not get tired. I would not give your Vegetable Compound for all the rest of the medicines in the world. I tried doctor's medicine and they did me no good."—MRS. MARY K. WINS, R. F. D. No. 3, Utica, Ohio.

Another Case.
Neb. Ill.—"I was bothered for ten years with female troubles. I was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work and even my husband had to spend a few days in bed. I read so many letters about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and female troubles that I got a bottle of it. It did me more good than anything else I ever took and now I have cured me. I feel better than I have for years and told everybody what the Compound has done for me. I believe I would not be living today but for that."—MRS. HETTY GREENSTREET, Neb. Ill.

to the point I had started from. I was paying no attention to my father, as I never did when we were out on the field together, and when I returned he was nowhere to be seen.

The Tragedy

"I was very much startled. This may seem strange or odd to you, Mildred, but you must remember he had not been out of my sight for two years, except when we slept and we slept in the same room. I called all the workmen and the house servants and we searched high and low for my father but could not find him. Next day we found his body at the foot of that big granite hill. He had fallen and was killed. But to his head, Mildred, was a large dent which he had smothered. The place within the dicker work was broken in a thousand places and the wicker work was bent badly out of shape. Where he had secured the dent which was his chest I could never learn, but it was almost a new one. That is all, Gordon."

"It was terrible," said Mildred. "I am not sorry that you told me, Gordon."

CHAPTER XXXV.

GORDON drove to the bungalow as early next morning as the law and good breeding allowed. Mildred had barely finished breakfast when the sound of the car outside the window.

"Come on, Elmer," she cried, gaily, "we'll make Mr. Kelly take us for a ride."

"Mr. Kelly, eh? That's a good one. I heard you call him Gordon over the telephone last night," laughed the boy.

"All right, Elmer, I'll not quarrel with you," returned Mildred with a smile. "But what were you doing; listening to what I said?"

"Honest, I wasn't, Mildred. I just heard how you started out and then I walked away."

"You are a good little boy. Now let's go out and recite our motto. They went out on the porch.

"Howdy, Gordon," was Mildred's greeting. "Elmer has found us out. He knows we call each other by our first names. What's on the tape for today?"

"I suppose that we go to my place. There's some things there that might interest Elmer—the ball field, for instance."

"Fine idea, you got a ball field?" exclaimed the lad.

"Certainly I have, and if you behave yourself and promise not to tease Mildred, maybe you and I will have a little game of tossing the ball around."

"Oh, hurry, Mildred; let's get started," cried Elmer.

A Regular Ball Field

They were soon at the granite post that marked the entrance to the big estate. The private driveway leading to the mansion was nearly a mile and a half long. When they emerged from the forest of trees and Elmer saw the big granite mansion for the first time his eyes bulged in surprise. Gordon drove the car around the house to give the lad a good view of it and then turned toward the tower. About a quarter of a mile further on they came to the ball field, which was in a valley sheltered from the wind. Elmer went in at once and Mildred could not suppress an exclamation of delight at the particularly near arrangement of things. The diamond was laid out in the regulation manner. The field was very large and was bordered by a wire fence. Away out to the outfield a screen law-mower was at work, while Steve, Gordon's colored boy, was busy mowing on the foot lines with fresh willow.

"We arrived in a little earlier than we were expected," said Gordon, "but they will be through in a few minutes. I have only seen one other ball field, and that was at Atlanta, but I don't believe there is a more perfect field in the world than this."

"It certainly looks lovely," was Mildred's comment. "And this is where you learned to play baseball?"

"Right here," smiled Gordon, smiling. "I suppose you had a lot of the work men around the place to play with you?"

"No, I didn't."

"The you mean to say you learned to play baseball out here all alone?"

"All alone, except for a little aid from Steve."

"How in the world could you do it?" demanded Mildred.

Gordon laughed.

"That's what all the reporters in Atlanta kept asking me," he replied. "The answer is simple enough. I'll tell you; I had a lot."

A Shed Full of Toys

"Oh, come on, Gordon," exclaimed Elmer, raising up and interrupting the conversation. "Come on out on the diamond and toss the ball," and grabbing the highest priced ball player in the world by the arm he dragged him from the automobile, thereby suppressing a piece of information that the entire baseball world, including Manager Bill South of the Atlanta Club, would have been glad to hear.

"Come with me first, Elmer," said

Gordon, "and perhaps you would like to see what I am going to show Elmer, too, Mildred."

Near the ball field was a long, low structure of granite. They walked to it and entered. It proved to be a gymnasium fitted with all the appliances for exercising. Adjoining was a baseball "cage" that many a college would have been glad to have had for the use of its athletes.

"What a plaything," exclaimed Mildred. "You seem to have all that a boy could wish for."

"Everything," replied Gordon. "There was nothing I could dream of that my father did not get for me. If it were possible to get it, there is a shed behind the grass that is literally filled with toys—toys for a baby, toys for a boy and toys for an older boy. This gymnasium and 'cage' was the latest toy my father gave me. It was completed about four years ago."

Although the "cage" was a cluttered track.

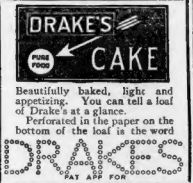

"When I used to practice sprinting," explained Gordon, "I told the manager of the Atlanta club one day that I used to time myself and he didn't believe me. But I did it with an electric timing device that began recording when I started at this end and stopped when my breast touched the tape at the other end."

"Gee, you must have a awful lot of money," observed Elmer.

"Elmer, you mustn't make such personal remarks," said Mildred reprovingly.

Five Hundred Dollars in Prizes for Best Solution of 'The Triple Tie'

Prizes aggregating $500 offered by the Boston AMERICAN for the best solution of the great serial novel, "The Triple Tie," as follows:

- First prize $200
- Second prize 100
- Third prize 50
- Fourth prize 25
- Fifth prize 15
- Sixth prize 10
- 20 other prizes, each, 5

"THE TRIPLE TIE" will be run in generous daily installments until June 25, when the final chapter will be published. Toward the very close of the story the serial will end abruptly at one of the most dramatic situations ever conceived by a novelist. Readers will then be asked to supply the solution to the several mysteries that are involved when the installments end.

Those reading "THE TRIPLE TIE" today, if you have not already done so, and send your solution to the AMERICAN. THIS IS NOT A GUESSING CONTEST. Ordinarily, however, logical and analytical elements will be largely considered in awarding the prize.

A synopsis of the last installment will be placed in the hands of Joseph H. O'Neil, president of the Publishers Trust Company. It will be held by him in a sealed envelope until a committee of three citizens not connected in any way with the Boston AMERICAN may select the winner of the prize.

Illustrated by Frank Craig

FULL SYNOPSIS.

Daniel O'Neill, a powerful, soft-spoken man, forces his only daughter, Mary, into a loveless marriage with the impetuous and prodigal Lord Rax, so that his ambition to have his daughter the daughter of the one earl in Kilan may be realized. Mary, a coarset-tongued young woman, whose marriage is supposed to follow her father's desire, and who has no love for the man with this ungodly man may be purged of all its northward by the sacred sacrament through which she and her husband have just passed. That this hope is unfulfilled the events of their first evening together soon prove to her. Shattered to discover his lordship to be a man of world, sensual passions, Lady Rax refuses utterly to have anything to do with her husband until such time as he can prove himself worthy of her love. During the honeymoon at Lord Rax's, a divorcee who had been expelled from the convent Mary attended in Rome, attaches herself to the party, and makes the "honeymoon trip" a long series of afflictions and trouble for Lady Rax.

At last Lady Rax becomes certain of the infidelity of her husband and of the misconduct with Alma Lee. On her return to London Mary meets her old play-fellow, Martin Conrad, who has returned from his triumphant expedition to the Antarctic. Driven into ever closer relations with the only man for whose friendship she had ever cared, Mary finally awakes to the fact that she is bound to him by a sacred tie. Through this knowledge, and during her first more and more in love with Martin, she determines to run away from the care of her father and her husband into the arms of the man who has been her true friend from childhood.

Mary's home-coming to Castle Rax is a sad affair. Her husband has the tumble-down old mansion with his fast friends from London, including Alma Lee, who assumes control of the household. Ultimately the illness of her father forces Mary to leave for a time from the household. But before visiting her father, Mary goes to see her Bishop and to her father's lawyer, only to be told that neither church nor state can offer her any relief from her false position. Eventually she consults Father Dan, telling him that she can no longer live with her faithless husband, but his counsel is to that she should do so. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go.

During her three days alone with her lover, Mary finds a grim satisfaction and the laws of the Church is a fragile thing compared with her overwhelming love for this poor, earnest, and true man. Her passionate words, "You are my real wife, I am your real husband," ringing in her ears, she finds herself free, and she is free to go with him. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go.

Mary determines, after the departure of Martin Conrad, to seek her father's forgiveness, but she is equally afraid of the vengeance of Alma Lee. Mary books passage for Liverpool on the midnight steamer, travelling in the steerage to further guard her flight. On the train from Liverpool to London she meets a woman who looks like a noblewoman, but she is a poor, old, and decrepit woman. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go. She then goes to her father, but he refuses to let her go.

"I had not been so wildly agitated I should have known that this was the wrong way with Mildred, and it was not until I had said it all in a rush of whispered words that I saw her eyes fixed on me as if they were about to start from their sockets."

"But, my dear, dear child," she said, "Mildred was not wrong. Your father and your husband may have done wrong, but you have done wrong too. Don't you see how?"

I did not tell her that I had thought of all that before and did not believe any longer that God would punish me for breaking a bond I had been forced to make. But when she was about to rise, saying that after all it would be a good thing to send me home before I had time to join my life to his—wherever he was—who had not me to forget my duty as a wife, I held her trembling hands and whispered, "Wait, Mildred. There is something I have not told you even yet."

"What is it?" she asked, but already I could see that she knew what I was going to say.

"Mildred," I said, "if I ran away from my husband I was not merely leaving a loved somebody else, but because."

I could not stop. I do want to know I could not. But how many like Mildred, who spend their lives among the lost ones, have a way of reading a woman's heart when it is in trouble, and Mildred read mine.

"Do you mean . . . that there are consequences . . . going to be?" she whispered.

"Yes."

"Does your husband know?"

"Yes."

"And your father?"

"No."

Mildred drew her hand away from me and crossed herself and said bravely, "No, no Mother of God!"

"I felt more humbled than I had ever before, but after a while I said: 'Now you see why I can never go back. And you will never see me, will you now?' There was silence for some moments. Mildred had drawn back in her chair as if an evil spirit had passed between us. But at length she said, 'It is not for me to judge you, Mary. But the gentlemen will come up and will force you to see the New O'Neill whom I knew at the Sacred Heart, and what am I to say to them?'"

"Say no," I cried. "Why shouldn't you? They'll never know anything of the contrary. Nobody will know."

"Nobody?"

I knew what Mildred meant, and in my shame and confusion, I tried to explain by telling her who the other woman was.

"It is Alma," I said.

her soul itself it need be."

What else I said I cannot remember, for I did not know what I was doing until I found myself looking out of the window and watching for her to appear. Then I became aware that Mildred was making no answer to my questions, and looking over my shoulder I saw that she was still sitting in my chair with insincere tones. "These gentlemen are making an examination of the house, and they wish to see your room. May they?"

I do not think I made any reply. I was holding my breath and watching in vain for the door to open. The more she made a pretence of allowing me, but I could see they were looking at Mildred. Their looks both her hands covering her face and tears trickling through her fingers onto the floor of her hall.

"My dear child," said the mother, "not to know who the young lady is, where she comes from, why she is here, and whether she is married or single or a widow!—it is quite impossible to take her in."

THE FINAL MOMENT AND A DECISION.

That happened me in a moment. I was asked with such remorse that I wished to throw my arms about her neck and kiss her. I dare not do so now, but I kiss by her side again and asked her to forgive me.

"Forgive me, sister," I said, "I see now that God has brought me to you, and there is no way out of it. You must do what you think is right, and I will follow you. I think the next few minutes must have been the most evil of my life. When you told me that you had been married, I thought I was going to die. Yet you wish me to live. How can I? Remember my words, my dear sister."

I think the next few minutes must have been the most evil of my life. When you told me that you had been married, I thought I was going to die. Yet you wish me to live. How can I? Remember my words, my dear sister."

assumed to say as plainly as words could speak, "Is it she?"

Mildred hesitated for a moment, then she was a dreadful silence, and then—may the Holy Virgin bless her!—she shook her head.

I could hear no more. I turned back to the window.

I heard the door close behind them. I heard their slow footsteps as they went down the stairs. And then, feeling as if my heart would burst, I turned to throw myself at Mildred's feet.

But Sister Mildred was on her knees, with her face buried in my bed, praying fervently.

The Loss of the Scioa

I did not know then, and it seems unnecessary to say now, why my father gave up the search for me in London. He did so, and from the day the Scioa fell she fell.

Then from the sense of being watched I passed into that of being lost.

But Mildred was my only friend in London, but she was practically out of my life. The Little Sisters had fixed her up in the interests of her work among the lost ones in a tiny flat at the top of a lofty building near to Piccadilly, where her lighted window always reminded me of a lighted one on the edge of a dangerous reef. But in giving me her address she warned me not to come to her except in case of urgent need, and she would not be bound for me to be called "one of Sister Mildred's girls."

Oh, the awful loneliness of London! I thought I could have felt at home in the smallest village, for though nobody had spoken to me there, I should have found to know everything, while in London I had no time to know anything, for the ever-flowing tide of human faces flashed past me and were lost in a moment like waves under the moon at sea.

Others just as friendless have wandered in the streets of the big city. I knew I was not the first, and I am sure I have not been the last to find London the most solitary place in the world. But I really and truly think there was one peculiar to my situation, my loneliness must have been deeper than that of the most friendless refugees.

Nearly every member of our boarding house used to recede once a week or once a month a letter containing a recitation from some unknown source, with which he paid his landlady and discharged all his other obligations.

I had no such letter to receive, so to keep up the character I had not quite but had allowed myself to maintain of being a captain's wife I used to go out once a week under pretence of calling at a shipping office to draw part of my husband's pay.

In my childish ignorance of the habits of business people I selected Saturday afternoon for this purpose, and in my fear of encountering my husband or my husband's friends in the West End street, I chose the less conspicuous thoroughfare at the other side of the river.

Why Should a Chicken Lay a Soft-Shelled Egg?

Because, Willie, the chicken don't know how to create a hard shelled egg unless it has some food with lime in it.

So chicken raisers often provide limestone gravel, broken oyster shells or some other form of lime.

Let the chicken wander free and it finds its own food and behaves sensibly.

Shut it up and feed stuff lacking lime and the eggs are soft-shelled.

Let's step from chickens to human beings.

Why is a child "backward" and why does a man or woman have nervous prostration or brain-fog? There may be a variety of reasons but one thing is certain.

If the food is deficient in Phosphate of Potash the gray matter in the nerve centers and brain cannot be rebuilt each day to make good the cells broken down by the activities of yesterday.

Phosphate of Potash is the most important element Nature demands to unite albumen and water to make gray matter.

Grape-Nuts food is heavy in Phosphate of Potash in a digestible form.

A chicken can't always select its own food, but a thoughtful man can select suitable food for his children, wife and himself.

Punish the Real Promoters of the Bribing and Murdering Railroad

On December 30, 1912, I wrote as follows in the Boston AMERICAN:

"New England is suffering under the oppressive monopoly of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

"New England is disposed to blame Mr. Mellen for the evils of this railroad monopoly, and in doing so entirely to exaggerate the importance of Mr. Mellen:

"The dog is said often to bite the stick that beats him. But the intelligent and educated citizen of this progressive nation should have more discernment than that foolish animal and should look for the hand that wields the stick that beats him.

"Mellen is not responsible for the creation of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad monopoly, nor for the resultant evils of that monopoly.

"The individuals who are mainly responsible for both are Morgan & Co. They created the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad monopoly, just as they created other similar monopolies—in the same manner and for the same purpose.

"Morgan & Co. operate according to a very simple business system, or rather bandit system, because the processes are essentially those of the highwayman of high finance.

"Morgan & Co.'s system is this: In the first place, they secure a monopoly of the institutions operating in a certain commodity or controlling a certain section.

"In the second place, having obtained a monopoly, they inflate and overcapitalise the securities of the institutions monopolized to many times their intrinsic value.

"In the third place, they proceed, by means of the monopoly, to extort high prices for inadequate service in an effort to pay dividends upon the inflated securities.

"This is the A, B, C and D of the whole system. When the monopoly is complete the citizens have no relief from it, as all competition has, of course, been eliminated.

"The citizens must then accept the inadequate service and pay the extortionate charges or be entirely deprived of a service which is essential to their business development, if not to their actual business existence.

"It is a case of your money or your life."

I received from Mr. Louis D. Brandeis a letter commending the above statement of the situation, but offering a suggestion.

Instead of saying "It is a case of your money OR your life," Mr. Brandeis suggested that the situation would be more accurately described if, in view of the disasters on the New York & New Haven Railroad, I had said "It is a case of your money AND your life."

I accept Mr. Brandeis' amendment. But even his amendment does not go far enough, nor does it state the whole disheartening truth.

The course of this murderous and traitorous monopoly constitutes a case of your money AND your life AND your public honor.

This monopoly of greed, without heart, or heed, or conscience, or civic spirit, robs its road in order that it may have money to bribe a legislature, plunder the people in order that it may have the power to strangle a State, murders its patrons as part of its treasonable plan to debauch the people's government.

At the very moment when the lives of citizens were being sacrificed to the callous indifference and cruel selfishness of this reckless and conscienceless monopoly, the people's legislature in Massachusetts was being bribed or bullied into passing a trolley merger bill further to extend and strengthen the menace of this monopoly.

Is there in this whole country a more dangerous and destructive institution than this New York and New Haven monopoly, which makes money out of plunder and murder and uses it to undermine the very foundations of government and society?

Is there any punishment inflicted upon individual criminals that is too great to inflict upon this collective criminal, or upon the individuals responsible for this collective criminality?

Is there any motive which inspires the individual criminal which is meaner than the mercenary motive which inspires this collective criminal?

Is there any consequence of individual crime which is more menacing to society, to law and order and to respect for law and order, to property rights and to human rights, than the consequences of the collective crime of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad?

If an individual steals, he is sent to jail. What has happened to the individuals who are responsible for the plunder of the public in the conduct of the New Haven Railroad?

If an individual bribes, he is pilloried and imprisoned. What has happened to the individuals who are responsible for the habitual political debauchery of the New Haven Railroad?

If an individual kills, he is hanged. What has become of the individuals who are responsible for the continual killings on the New Haven Railroad?

Is punishment to be meted out only to the little, is immunity to be extended always to the great?

Is there to be forever in this alleged republic of ours large punishment for small crimes and no punishment for large crimes?

The unhappy engineer is merely the agent of Mr. Mellen. Are we to punish the agent and let the principal go free?

Mr. Mellen is but the instrument of Morgan & Co. and William Rockefeller. Are we to punish the instrument and allow the responsible individuals to escape?

Are we to make a joke of justice, a laughing stock of law? Are we to encourage anarchy in high places and seek to suppress it in lower stations? Are we to incite discontent by obvious injustice, and then complain of the consequences of our cowardice and our folly?

The American people have had enough of the brutal methods of the bandit under the cloak of business. They have determined to make an end of bribery as an investment, of treason as a business transaction. They have determined to terminate highway robbery and high-handed murder as accessories of high finance.

There is no objection on the part of the people of this country to Mr. Wilson's "gibbet of infamy," except that it has stood empty too long.

There will be nothing but approval on the part of the public for a hanging as high as Haman's, as long as the hanging is of the responsible heads of these criminal institutions and not merely of the irresponsible agents.

The unhappy engineer makes a few hundred dollars a year out of the part he is compelled to play in these tragedies.

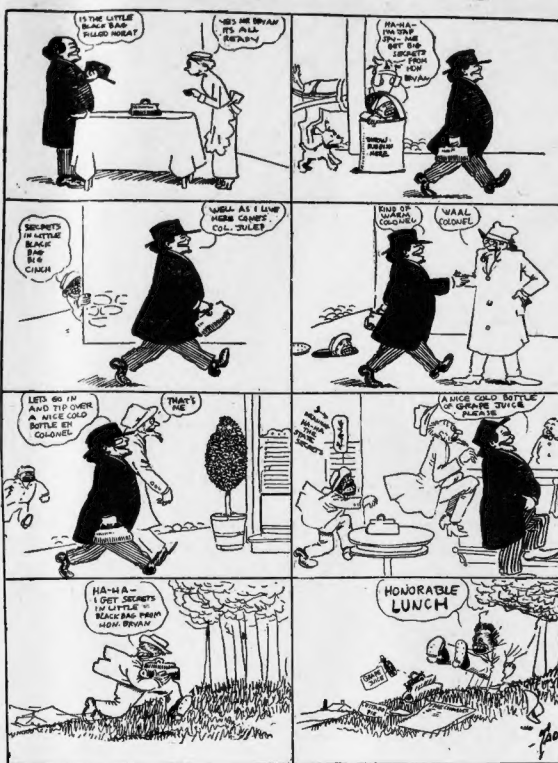

Mr. Mellen makes a few thousand dollars.

The responsible promoters make many millions.

Let the punishment for theft and murder and political corruption be meted out in proportion to the profit made by those responsible for these crimes.

UNCLE SI REFLECTS

By GORDON JOHNSTONE

THERE used to be a time when I was just a little chap That you had to mend your manners whether you were

Russ or Jap; And you couldn't do no bragging and a-blowing off of steam, For you might wake up and find yourself indulging in a dream;

For of all the tartars living there was none like Uncle Sam When he found that you were meddling with his patriotic jam.

There used to be a time when that old tattered flag of ours Waved over men unknown to fear with great God-given powers;

There's Washington and Jefferson and Grant, the soldier, too; And Lincoln of the homely wit who loved the gray and blue;

And those were men who scorned the sop that's thrown upon the sod, And plucked their bread of courage from the altar of their God.

There used to be a time, when I was just a little chap, That you had to walk real quiet if you would stay on the map;

When the Stars and Stripes in triumph from a million flagpoles leaped, And the strains of "Yankee Doodle" thrilled, through—oh, but what's the use?

Those good old days are gone and now we fatten on abuse.

Letters from American Readers

PLEASED BY A-ERICAN STAND EDITOR BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I am a content reader of the AMERICAN and greatly value its vigorous manner in which it deals with the interests, or trusts, as they are known.

To say that I was pleased with the editorial upholding the recent legislators who voted for the trolley merger is putting it mildly—not simply because I am a Progressive, but because it was a courageous stand—or a great principle.

Sincerely yours, HENRY R. NORTHROP, No. 14 Central street, Beverly.

GIRLS' WAGES FOR FISHERY. EDITOR BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—My two daughters say I am silly and old fashioned when I advise them not to spend so large a share of their incomes—both are working girls—for all stockings and expensive hosiery.

They only that the silver side they know regard these luxuries as necessities, and that "business" women and serviceless articles I am used to and have always considered appropriate to the circumstances of my family. I think that these extravagant notions are responsible for a good many of the tragedies one hears of every day in this great and wicked city. ANXIOUS MOTHER.

The Sun Growing Old; Paralysis Slowly Creeping Over God of Day

This Fact May Account for Cold Weather of May and June—Heat of the Huge Orb Is Diminishing.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE curious conduct of the weather recently serves to call attention to the very important research which the Smithsonian Institution has been conducting for some years concerning the variability of the sun. Whether the recent sudden drop of temperature was due to a failure of radiation from the sun cannot be definitely stated, but there is no longer doubt that the sun is a variable star, and that its variations are often sufficient to produce a general fall, or rise, of temperature amounting, in brief periods of time, to several degrees.

The cause of these variations is not fully understood, but it evidently resides in the sun itself. In effect it is somewhat like the fluctuations of a fire—alternately dying down and then blazing more fiercely. But the sun is not a fire, although it is hotter than any fire we can produce. It is a globe of intensely heated gases, in which substances like iron, which are solid upon the earth, exist in the state of glowing vapors.

It remains in a constantly heated condition because of its immense mass (about 300,000 times that of the earth). The mutual attraction of its gaseous particles draws them together, producing an immense compression in the interior, and this compression serves to increase the heat. As the heat radiates away from the sun's surface the supply within is kept up by the closer contraction of the whole mass. The sun becomes gradually smaller through this process, diminishing in diameter, according to Helmholtz, about 200 feet per year.

But the diameter of the sun is about 860,000 miles, so that its diminution in a thousand years would not be more than about fifty miles, or less than one-seventeenth of its diameter. The amount that would be perceptible from the earth. Yet, Helmholtz shows, by the mechanical laws of heat, that this relatively slight contraction of the sun is sufficient to account for all the heat that it continuously gives out.

The Heat Sent to Earth by the Sun Will Some Day Cease.

Now physics teaches us that this process cannot continue forever. The time will come (and we cannot tell just when) when the sun will cease to contract, and will begin to solidify. In the meantime the partially condensed vapors forming an atmosphere will become thicker, until they absorb so much of the radiation from within that the amount of heat that is sent to the earth and other planets will decrease enormously, and at length be cut off entirely.

Millions of years will elapse before that state of affairs is reached, but meanwhile many temporary variations are to be expected, and the observations that we have referred to indicate that such variations have already begun to manifest themselves.

Here is where the studies of astronomers concerning our variable stars that the sun (and the heavens are full of them) become of interest for everybody, since they show us suns in every stage of partial extinction. Some vary so little that very careful observations are required to show any change at all, but many others loom and sink like a dying conflagration, and seem to be quite near their end.

For millions of years, perhaps, the worlds that circle around such perishing suns have been experiencing conditions that one cannot present to the imagination without a shudder. Gradually the heat and light of their suns have been withdrawn; their inhabitants have seen the orb on whose radiation they depended become fainter and fainter, with many sudden but only temporary recoveries, until at last its disappearance the rightful cold of interstellar space extinguished the last spark of life.

The Sun Must Die Just as All Nature Does

To think that our sun is exempt from such an end would be as foolish as for a man in the heyday of his strength and vigor to flatter himself that he can escape the fate that, one by one, overtakes his older brothers. The variable stars are symbolic of the mortality of suns just as the passing of our friends into the shadows of age is symbolic of the evanescence of our own lives. Hence the fascination of the study of the fate of even the slightest failure of the energy of our sun must have for all thoughtful minds. The sun is the father of life for the earth, and to see him stumble ever so little is to experience a feeling akin to the child who first notices the trembling of its aged parent's protecting hand.
